Beecher Turus from Kansas. Beacher preached on Sunday in the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Instead of telling the people to look to Kansas, and to send rifles there, he told them to look to home, to be honest, and to force others to be honest. A great change in the doctrines of Beecher! After preaching up the solven y and solidity of the New York banks, he said:

There was cause for four in the lack of moral integrity and in the extravagance and praffigacy which prevailed in the business world. The railroads-the mitted their Boards of Directors to conduct affairs in the most unscrupulous manner, and in their corporate capacity they performed acts which would, if deed, "it would soon come to pass that the name of an officer of a railroad ompany would be synonymous with scoundrel." The stock sales, as conlucted in Wall-street, he characterized as gambling, just as much as sitting at a are table or playing with loaded dice, and a man that was a gambler was a thief. This vice was prevalent among all classes of the community. Even ministers sometimes dabbled in fancy stocks. Mr. Beecher then urged upon his congregation the duty of opposing these vices.
